The Interinstitutional Center for Indigenous Knowledge is affiliated with the global network of indigenous knowledge resource centers in South America, Europe, Asia, Africa and Oceania. In 2010, ICIK became the only global indigenous knowledge resource center in North America when an extensive indigenous knowledge resource collection amassed by Dr. Michael Warren at Iowa State University's Center for Indigenous Knowledge in Agriculture and Rural Development (CIKARD) was acquired by the Pennsylvania State University Libraries.

ICIK does not independently undertake indigenous knowledge research, preferring instead to build collaborative relationships that lead to interdisciplinary research addressing issues of community scholarship and resulting in a transformation of the academy to embrace reciprocal outreach to, and in-reach from, local communities.
