

Indigenous Peoples and Local Communities Vital to the Global Environment

In January 2017, LandMark – the first global platform to provide maps of land held by indigenous peoples and local communities – released new carbon storage, tree cover loss, natural resource concessions, dam locations, and other data layers that shed light on the environment in which these lands exist.

Now anyone, anywhere can view and analyze indigenous and local communities' environmental contributions and identify threats to specific lands.