An End and a Beginning

With this, the April issue, John M. Coleman ends five distinguished years as editor of PENNSYLVANIA HISTORY. Under his able and efficient direction our magazine has continued to grow in importance, and with each succeeding issue it has gained a firmer place among the historical publications of the nation.

The earnest and untiring work of Professor Coleman is deeply appreciated by every member of the Association and all accept with reluctance his decision to relinquish the editorship. Not only are we grateful to Professor Coleman for his devotion to the never-ending labors of producing an excellent magazine, but also to Lafayette College for its generous sponsorship.

Beginning with the July issue Professor Russell F. Weigley of the Drexel Institute of Technology will assume the editorship of PENNSYLVANIA HISTORY. He takes over the task with the “hope I can continue to give your organization as good a journal as John Coleman has.” With this good hope, with the support of the administrative officials of the Drexel Institute, and with the best wishes of all the members of the Association, he cannot fail. The magazine will continue to grow.

I am sure I speak for everyone when I say “Thanks, John Coleman” and “Welcome, Russell Weigley.”
