THE DAILY OCCURRENCE DOCKET OF THE PHILADELPHIA ALMSHOUSE: SELECTED ENTRIES, 1800–1804

THE previous issue of Pennsylvania History contained most of the entries for a two-month period in 1800 from the Daily Occurrence Docket of the Philadelphia Almshouse. The following excerpts from those records are more selective, chosen because they reveal important aspects about the lives of people admitted to the institution during the early nineteenth century. In particular, we included a large number of vignettes about poorer women since information about them often is difficult to find in other sources. The almshouse clerk’s capitalization, use of the ampersand, and spelling have been retained, but we have expanded abbreviations and silently altered punctuation to render the text more comprehensible.
