JANINE BLACK ARKLES is an assistant professor of management at Kean University in Union, NJ. She researches entrepreneurs from the 1700s in the Philadelphia, PA, area. Her interest in historical figures grew from her experiences living in a 1700s house in the historical district of Philadelphia. Her current focus is on black entrepreneurs of the 1700s–1800s as well as some digressions with technology advancements, such as the astronomical measurements made for the first time in the colonies by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon around 1763.

ELIZABETH HORNOR is an assistant professor of history at MidAmerica Nazarene University. Her research interests include the intersections of war and society in eighteenth-century North America.

ELLEN C. LEICHTMAN is associate professor of criminal justice at Eastern Kentucky University. She received her PhD from Brown University and is ABD at Temple University. She is particularly interested in the scandals of the police and courts of Philadelphia in the 1920s and 1930s, and in the interaction of machine politicians and reformers in the first half of the twentieth century. Her publications include “Complex Harmony: The Military and Professional Models of Policing,” and “Smedley D. Butler and the Militarisation of the Philadelphia Police, 1924–1925.”

“Reading Leslie Stainton’s Staging Ground is like having a front-row seat at a thrilling epic drama. Stainton packs her stage with real characters, the famous and the infamous, and events unfold in a tumult of action both tragic and comic and at times heartbreakingly poignant. This book is great theater—immediate, engrossing, cathartic.”

—Helen Sheehy, author of *Eleonora Duse: A Biography

Staging Ground An American Theater and Its Ghosts Leslie Stainton

“Rarely does one encounter so trenchant a mix of historical detail (meticulously researched) and personal history (deeply felt). Leslie Stainton weaves the twin strands of her hometown’s Fulton Theatre and her lifelong engagement with drama in ways both delicate and deft; this is one woman’s story, but the story also of our long national wrangle with make-believe and truth. From burial ground to burlesque hall, from jailhouse to opera house and movie theater, the Fulton’s ghosts still haunt this author and, by extension, us.”

—Nicholas Delbanco, University of Michigan

“An effective framework synthesizing personal memoir with historical overview—and case studies drawn from the annals of the Fulton Opera House in Lancaster, Pennsylvania—produces an insightful study, one that offers an innovative, novel microcosm of American theater in small-town America. Stainton’s extensively researched examination begins with the Fulton’s role in such early events as the Paxton Rebellion and the murder of fourteen Conestoga Indians in the town jail, now the theater’s foundation, and ends with the author’s final departure from Lancaster and the beginning of a new life. This is a fascinating, candid, often entertaining journey, with frequent reflections on crucial issues in our history. Stainton’s book makes an important addition to the literature on American theater and culture.”

editor of Cambridge Studies in American Theatre and Drama
