ANNE FELICITY WOODHOUSE received her doctorate in European cultural history from Stanford University and has recently completed the joint Winterthur Museum—University of Delaware program in Early American Culture.

DAVID F. LONG, Professor of History at the University of New Hampshire, specializes in both the history of United States foreign relations and early United States naval history. He is the author of a biography of Commodore David Porter and of a forthcoming biography of Commodore William Bainbridge. At present he is completing his research on a life of Commodore James Biddle.

BRUCE M. STEPHENS is an Assistant Professor of Religious Studies at the Delaware County Campus of the Pennsylvania State University. A Drew University Ph.D., he concerns himself with American religious life and thought, especially late eighteenth- and early nineteenth-century American Protestantism.

RICHARD B. FISHBANE, a Ph.D. candidate in American educational history at the University of Pennsylvania, serves as part-time Instructor at the University, teaching a course in the Social Foundations of Education.
