Contributors

WILLIAM W. CUTLER III is professor of history, emeritus, at Temple University, where he taught from 1968 to 2011. A specialist in the history of American education, he has written often about the relationship between public schools and their constituents. His publications include Parents and Schools: The 150-Year Struggle for Control in American Education (2000). In retirement he serves as the historiographer of the Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania and associate editor of the Encyclopedia of Greater Philadelphia.

RICHARD S. GRIMES teaches early American history for La Roche College, the Community College of Allegheny County, and the Community College at Beaver County. His manuscript on the history of the western Delaware Indians and their experiences during the eighteenth century in the Ohio Country is currently being reviewed for publication by an academic press.

MARY MAILLARD is a documentary editor living in Vancouver, British Columbia. She is currently working on a project related to her work on Frank J. Webb, a documentary edition of letters between Louisa Jacobs, daughter of slave-narrative author Harriet Jacobs, and Eugenie Webb, niece of Frank J. Webb.
