

A GLIMPSE OF THE FIRE CENTENNIAL EXHIBIT
(Front portion of Stevenson Hall, Historical Building)

THE FIRE CENTENNIAL EXHIBIT

In the afternoon and evening of April 10, and for two afternoons and evenings thereafter, there was staged in the Historical Society's building a notable exhibit of portraits and articles illustrative of prominent personalities and of life in general in the Pittsburgh of the 1840's, the decade of the Big Fire. The exhibit would ordinarily have been kept intact and open to the public considerably longer, but most of the items shown had been borrowed, and as Mr. Siebeneck, chairman of the 1845 Committee, explains, much of the loaned furniture was normally in daily use in the owners' homes, and the cost of guarding expensive portraits, silver, and other loaned treasures for a longer period would have been prohibitive.

The list of exhibits published in the day's souvenir program and catalogue, An Historical Commemoration, was necessarily made up some days before event, so it includes some items that were not actually shown, and does not include certain others that were.

The following revised lists are therefore presented here as a more accurate and complete record of this feature of the centennial commemoration.

RELICS OF THE FIRE

Certain of these pieces show the markings left by the straw in which they were packed. One account states that bales of unpacked chinaware fell from the third floor to the cellar of a store on Wood Street.
