The Monongahela Republican in referring to Sewickley, gives the people of that Ohio river town taffy [insincere flattery], by calling them "The charming society of that canton of pure water and good people". Our Sewickley man was completely paralyzed with delight on reading the above, and could only Hazzard¹ the remark that Monongahela had more "Fair women and brave men" to the square inch than any town of its size in the state. However, we believe the Republican has made a typographical error, and instead of a "Canton of pure water", it probably meant to print "A canteen of rye whiskey".
